αντιπαροχή

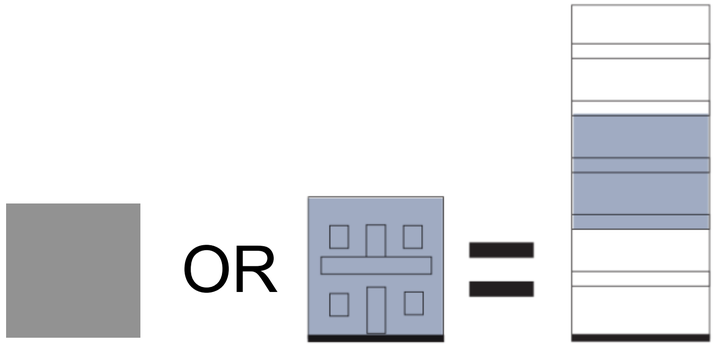

Antiparochi (αντιπαροχή)

- Anti- (αντί): Meaning "in return for," "opposite," or “against"
-Parochi (παροχή): Meaning "provision," "granting," "supply," or “offering”.

-Literal Translation: "Provision in return" or "mutual exchange".
-It describes a quid pro quo arrangement.

-The antiparochi system was formalised by the 1929 law of horizontal (co)ownership (3741/1929) .
-Though it already had emerged before 1929 independent from any state planning, formalising it increased the widespread of the ‘land-for-flats’ trade-off.
-The state used tax incentives to popularise it further, with a very high tax for transferring existing buildings, and almost zero tax for the landowner of an antiparochi development.
-The horizontal ownership regulation, also defined the legal relationship between individual owners and the shared areas; and the corresponding rights to the original plot.
-Allowed for developments even in land plots of 40sq.m, which contributed in losing most of open/green space.

-Introduced ‘retire’ penthouse with a 2.5m recess
-70% of the plot of land could be developed
-What also developed was a mix social integration within one apartment block, with the lower floors going to working-class/sometime immigrants, middle floors to the middle classes and the top ‘retire’ apartments to the more affluent classes.

2000’s

A new tax law was put in place in 2006, forcing the land owner to pay tax on the value of the apartments he gets from the builder, which made it less favourable, leading many to prefer direct land purchases instead.

-Today Antiparochi has largely been reduced with most developers buying land
- New proposed “Social Antiparochi” 2025
-Private developers will undertake the development of public land/property in exchange for the allocation of part of the new housing for social housing.
